

Ariel Brooks is the Director of Capacity and Operations for the Center for Economic Democracy. As the organization's second employee, Ariel has worn many hats - both operational and programmatic - throughout the last four years of startup and growth. Currently, Ariel's primary roles include: running the Solidarity Economy Initiative and Solidarity Philanthropy Learning Circle, program management for the organization's emerging Social Movement Investment work, fundraising and resource mobilization, and organizational development.

Prior to her work at CED, Ariel worked at the intersection of higher education and nonprofits, including founding roles at Strong Women, Strong Girls and The College for Social Innovation, and developing new program areas at Marlboro College and at the Phillips Brooks House Association at Harvard College. Ariel has a BA in Sociology from Harvard College, and an MEd in instructional design from UMass Boston. She lives in Ashfield, MA with her husband, daughter and two cats.
