

Lindsey Kalkbrenner

Lindsey has 15 years of experience galvanizing SCU's transformation into a top-tier sustainability performer. She combines grassroots mobilization and change agent expertise with her commitment to environmental health, financial strength, and social justice to lead the Center for Sustainability in supporting SCU's mission of educating the whole person. Lindsey holds a Bachelor of Science in biology and a Master of Business Administration, both from Santa Clara University. She was born and raised in Hawaii. In 2014, the California Higher Education Sustainability Conference recognized her with a Sustainability Champion Award.

The Center for Sustainability at Santa Clara University, a program of University Operations, has a staff of 4, as well as 20 paid undergraduate interns, 2 faculty associates, and 6 staff associates.

SCU earned a Gold Rating in AASHE's Sustainability Tracking, Assessment, and Rating System (STARS), and is consistently listed among top U.S. higher education institutions in Princeton Review's Green Honor Roll and Sierra Magazine's Cool Schools.
